Medical Advice on Occupational Health Matters including Occupational Health Vaccination

Some times GPs are consulted either by employers or their employees for advice on occupational health matters. This puts the GPs in a very difficult position because they do not necessarily have the knowledge of the circumstances of the employment nor of occupational health issues to enable them to give sensible advice. Such medicine is also outside the terms and conditions of service of the GPs NHS contract, but GPs are not able to charge fees to their own patients for this work.

The following doctors have special occupational training or experience and are willing to be approached by individuals, whether employers or employees, who are not registered with them under the NHS. The doctors would be able to give advice on occupational health matters and advice on vaccinations. They can also carry out the vaccinations and monitoring of the results if it should be necessary. The cost of the service would fall with the employer or the person consulting the doctor, since this is not part of the National Health Service.
